The suffix "innen" by professions in the German language indicates the gender "female". It is a gender-defining addition to the original word. The "innen" series of works refers to the strategies that female artists have used to define their own fields, such as the use of textile techniques and materials, as well as explorations of corporeality or of gender-specific roles and attributions. Traces of rejection remain as scars in the shape, but the brooches "innen" are resilient and are able to raise again.
